SPIRITS

The result of human curiosity and discovery.

The first skeleton ever found and named by many scientists, it is the skeleton of a man who lived in about 1873 or 1874, and was the first to be named after a person. SPIRITS BAR

FROM CURIOSITY, DISCOVERY EVOLVES.

Humans have long tried to understand our world, explaining its complexities through theories of spirituality, biology, geography and astronomy. This insatiable thirst for understanding fuelled a period of unprecedented discovery during the 1800s with the mapping of our globe, the industrial revolution and the collection of countless botanical, zoological and geological artefacts. Our minds expanded with curiosity as mysterious fossils were uncovered, answering some questions, but presenting thousands more. And just as palaeontologists have captured our imagination with incredible beasts from centuries past, so too have the world's master distillers by handcrafting the finest spirits through alchemy of earth's elements. These spirits endeavour to explain the complexities of our world and are celebrated, wholeheartedly, at Evolve Spirits Bar.

Australian (Mainland) Whisky

A country born of turmoil, escape and the hope for a fresh start, Australia has a rich, if not troubled, history. A vast landmass stretching from the Gibson Desert in Western Australia to the Great Dividing Range in Queensland, it is impossible to quantify its incredible and unique landscape. As such it is with the whisky created on mainland Australia. The individual and unique geographical environment of each distillery combined with each distiller's unique approach makes it difficult to categorise a national style. The fundamentals vary with each distillery: the barley may be a local variety grown for brewing or purpose-grown from paddock to bottle. The yeast can be sourced from brewing companies, imported from overseas, or a wild yeast strain. The peat might be mined or imported depending on the distillery's location. The stills range from traditional Scottish stills to French alembic stills. The casks are often experimental, taking advantage of Australia's vast wine regions and fortified wine. It is an industry that is setting itself apart from the norm and focusing on creating a truly unique spirit.

What can be quantified about Australian whisky is that it has evolved from the late 1700s grain spirits into today's booming craft industry, with great care focused on quality whisky.

Scottish Whisky

Scotch is not only a style of whisky but an expression for a country. A remote, harsh, inexplicable and solitary country, it has three perfect elements for whisky making – peat, pure air and pure water. The first recorded reference to whisky is from 1494 in the accounting records for the royal finances, the Exchequer rolls, where an allowance was made for “eight bolls of malt to Friar John Cor wherewith to make aqua vitae”, otherwise known as whisky. The term “scotch” is trademarked and refers only to whisky from Scotland. There are five main whisky regions in Scotland: the Highlands, Speyside, Lowlands, Campbeltown and Islay/ Islands. Scottish whisky is distinctly known for its smokiness given by the peat, but it can also have floral notes moving to spicy or cocoa depending on the region.

The traditions of Scottish whisky date back centuries, and some of the techniques and stills have been handed down through generations of distillers. What has evolved is a passion for producing an incredible product across generations, and the ability to use technology to enhance these techniques.

Blend, Vatted & Fusion Malts

Blended Scotch Whisky is a mix of different whiskies, vatted together to create a consistent flavour. Careful blending skills that's as much an art as it is science! Master Blenders have incredible knowledge of all whisky types – blending together various whiskies to achieve a consistent brand flavour that we know and love.

Islands

The Islands represent a very diverse region (and one that is technically not recognised as a region at all by the Scotch Whisky Association... for geographical ease, the Islands are considered part of the Highlands. The Islands offer many different characters, however thanks to the surrounding sea usually salinity is to be found. Other characters can include honey, smoky malt, citrus, herbal and oily drams with a nutty cereal character.

Irish Whiskey

It is believed that Irish monks learnt the technique of distilling perfumes in the Middle East between 700-1000 AD and brought it back to Ireland. The technique was modified to create a spirit known as Uisce Beath or Poitin, and kickstarted spirit production in Ireland. The first record of Irish whisky was discovered in the Annals of Clonmacnoise in 1405, and the death of Richard Magrannell, the Chieftain of Moyntyreolasis, was attributed to “taking a surfeit of aqua vitae” at Christmas. At the turn of the 18th century, Dublin was a bustling trading port and whisky was a booming business. However, it was not to last. A disagreement with the U.S. bootleggers and an Isolationist government policy led to the collapse of the Irish export market in the 20th century and, by the early 1900s, there were less than three actives distillers remaining. However, in the late 1900s a new release from Jameson and changing economic conditions, combined with a revitalized export market, rebooted the Irish whisky market to the one we know today.

Irish whiskey, like its Scottish counterpart, has evolved over the centuries. Today, a classic Irish whisky could be malted, unmalted, smokey, sweet, single pot distilled or unsmoked. It is generally served neat or over ice.

Japanese Whisky

Japanese whisky is a representation of both its national culture and philosophy. Japanese distillers work in harmony with technology, science and the environment to make a unique whisky that represents the story of Japan, with a deep connection to aesthetics, art, flavours and culture. A Japanese concept, “shibusa” reflects on an object’s natural state: simple, yet deep, and the art of distillation is a reflection of natural flavours from a simple product. Japanese whisky is about displaying the essence of flavours, showcasing both purity and impurity. The difference in barley, Japanese oak, water, geology and geography showcases a lighter, aromatic and floral whisky. The founders of Japanese whiskies Masataka Taketsuru (Nikka) and Shinjiro Torii (Suntory) are reported to be close friends. Masataka left Suntory to found Nikka to create a different style of Japanese whisky.

Japanese whisky may have Scottish roots, but it has evolved into a unique expression of a culture, landscape and country.

American Whiskey

Alcohol heralds back to ancient times when it was used as medicine, followed by a medical distillate. Once distillation began, it was often dictated by what was available in the environment. Brandy is an excellent example of this, distilled from an abundance of wine in France. In America, it was corn and maize. America had an interrupted start with alcohol production – between prohibition, World Wars One and Two, alcohol production had come to a complete halt and many states were dry. It was after the wars, buoyed by the wine industry and renewed imports of whisky, that production restarted. Bourbon, rye, corn and wheat whiskies are the major distillates from America.

Classic cocktails like the Manhattan and the Old Fashioned evolved out of the prohibition era, to disguise moonshine and high alcohol spirits smuggled into America.

Bourbon

On the contrary, bourbon does not have to be made in Kentucky. It can be made anywhere in the United States. Bourbon must be made from a fermented mash (meaning cooked grains mixed with yeast) that consists of at least 51% corn. The rest of the mash bill can have any other type of cereal grain – most having some combination of malted barley, rye and/or wheat. Bourbon must be aged in a new charred-oak barrel, however has no minimum aging requirements. To be labelled “straight” the bourbon must be at least two years old.

Rye Whiskey

Rye whiskey can be made anywhere in the world, but to be labelled as 'rye' in the US it must adhere to a few rules; must be made from a fermented mash of at least 51% rye grain. Like bourbon, it must also be matured in new charred-oak barrels and to be called a 'straight rye' must be aged for more than two years. However, rye whiskey tends to have a more peppery and a signature spicy finish.

World Whisky

We live in an era of booming craft whisky ventures across the world, from generation-old families with a history of grape spirits in Europe to fledging distillers in India to large scale operations in Taiwan. While barley is quite common, other cereal grains are also used and dictated by what is common in the region. The flavour profiles from these spirits can be unique, individual and amazing.

The ventures are occurring in regions that have not produced whisky before, such as India and Taiwan. The climate in these areas alters the expansion and shrinkage of the spirit in the barrel, and therefore the taste and time-aging. Kavalan, a distillery where tropical distillation is being examined, has won two world titles for its single malts. Distilleries in France and Spain have access to some of the best casks in the world for aging spirits and fill a cask with spirit days after the sherry, port or wine was emptied. It can take up to six months for casks to reach Australia from Europe.

As the whisky of the world continue to evolve and change, so does the adventure continue.

Cognac, Armagnac & Brandies

The origins of brandy can be traced back to the 8th century when the Mediterranean states begin distilling spirit from grapes. It comes from the Dutch word “brandewijn” meaning burned wine. Brandy can be any type of distilled fruit liquor. A distilled apple spirit from Normandy known as Calvados is a style of Brandy, as is Cognac.

Cognac is distilled wine from the Cognac region in France, steeped in history beginning from as early as the 15th century. Nearly all Cognac is made from the grape variety Ugni Blanc. There are four great houses of Cognac that have been in operation since the 18th century: Martell, Remy Martin, Hennessy, and Courvoisier.

Armagnac was first distilled about 200 years earlier than Cognac, in the Armagnac Region in Gascony, France. Armagnac is usually made from a blend of grape varieties. The geographical differences between Cognac and Armagnac result in different soil profiles, climate and grape varieties that produce very different flavours. Additionally, Armagnac is often single-distilled whereas Cognac is double-distilled.

A Phylloxera plague in the 19th century was devastating to grapes, forcing producers to evolve and use new grape varieties for Cognac & Armagnac.

Armagnac

Armagnac is a unique and distinctive kind of brandy that has been produced in the Armagnac region in southwest France. Armagnac is distilled from wine that is made from a blend of different grapes, falling into the 'brandy' family of spirits and remains the oldest of its kind in France.

Cognac

Similarly to Armagnac, Cognac is also a type of brandy; a spirit made from fruit. It is made exclusively with grapes that are known for their superior aromatic properties, grown in the Cognac region of France. The name Cognac is protected under French law and has three main requirements to satisfy; Firstly, cognac must be made from specific grape varieties, such as Ugni Blanc. Secondly, it must be distilled twice in copper pot stills. Thirdly, must be aged in oak barrels for a minimum of 2 years.

Brandy

While all Cognac is brandy... not all brandy is Cognac!

Brandy is a spirit made from distilled wine... or any other fermented fruit juices. Styles of Brandy are determined by the region the fruit comes from. Unlike Brandies close relatives (Cognac & Armagnac), Brandy can be made anywhere in the world... even here in Tasmania!

Ron, Rum & Rhum

Rum's story begins in the Caribbean Islands, where the explorer Christopher Columbus traded sugarcane seedlings for goods. Initially, the seedlings were used in the colonies for sugar production. A few hundred years later, it was discovered that molasses, a by-product from sugar production, could be distilled.

The appearance of column distillation in the 1800s signalled the boom for rum production and, soon after, Bacardi was founded.

Rum was especially popular during prohibition. "Rum Runners" from the Caribbean would transport Caribbean rum to outside U.S waters, load it onto smaller ships and smuggle it into the speakeasy bars of the U.S. The sailors discovered that a percentage of the rum evaporated during transportation. They named this, the 'angels' share', believing that angels were drinking it in exchange for safe passage across the seas.

Rum, is a traditional rum, made with molasses and tends to have more vivid, spiced, and heavy flavour notes.

Rhum is recognised as 'Rhum Agricole', made with pure sugar cane juice. Typically allowing for a more fruit and floral style of spirit.

Ron is also made by fermenting molasses and thus has similar characteristics to 'Rum' but tends to be slightly lighter and smoother profile.

The character, aroma and flavour of the rum is greatly influenced by the material used. Rum is often aged in old whisky barrels to give a softer, deeper flavour and blended by a master blender to achieve the perfect taste.

Tequila, Mezcal & Sotol

An ancient Mesoamerican civilisation known as the Olmecs drank the earliest forms of tequila, mezcal & sotol, known as “pulque”, over 3,000 years ago. In the 17th Century, it was discovered that boiling the heart of the agave plant and distilling the juices, created a drinkable spirit known as mezcal. It can take 8 – 10 years for the agave plant to reach its maturity, and it is roasted or soaked in underground pits before the distillation process to impart that deep, smoky flavour.

Tequila comes specifically from the heart of the blue agave plant, which is boiled before the distillation process begins and is produced in the region of Jalisco and surrounding areas.

Sotol is only made from wild-harvested dasyilirion wheeleri, found in the region of Chihuahua. It can take 12 – 15 years for these plants to reach maturity. Sotol uses a different still, compared to tequila and mezcal, and can have a creamy flavour contrasting to the pepperiness and citrus notes of tequila and the smokiness of mezcal.

Many Agave spirits from Mexico belong to a NOM (Norma Oficial Mexicana) number. This number denotes that the bottle is authentic tequila, produced in Mexico and can be an indicator to which tequila producer it belongs to.

Tequila

Tequila is a distilled spirit made from the fermented juices of the Blue Webber Agave plant, a member of the lily family and takes between seven to ten years for the plant to reach its maturity before it can be harvested. and can only be produced in certain regions of Mexico. There are several styles of tequila and specific regulations that distillers must follow. The five types of tequila include:

1. Blanco (also can be known as silver, plata or white tequila) is a clear spirit – rested for no more than 60 days in stainless steel or oak tanks, if aged at all.
2. Joven (or gold) tequila is a blend of white and aged tequilas
3. Reposado tequila, meaning rested. Tequilas are aged in oak casks for a minimum of two months, however most are aged between 3-9 months.
4. Anejo tequila, meaning old, is aged often in white French oak or bourbon barrels for a minimum of one year, producing a dark, robust spirit. Most are aged between 18 months – 3 years.
5. Extra-Anejo tequila, extra-old! These tequilas spend over 3 years in barrels.

Mezcal

This traditional agave spirit has been enjoyed by the Mexican people for generations. Though is often defined by its smoky character, mezcal is one of the most diverse spirits, ranging in style from delicate and tropical to robust and earthy. Mezcal can be made across nine Mexican states from a possible 30 varieties of agave plant.

Sotol & Raicilla

If you already love Tequila and mezcal, its time to try sotol and raicilla a try!

Raicilla – like tequila is made in the state of Jalisco, however is only made from two varieties of agave: lechugilla and puta de mula. Raicilla tends to be sweeter and fruitier than most other mezcals.

Sotol – Made from another ‘succulent’ plant, known as Desert Spoon. Produced mainly in the Mexican states of Chihuahua, Durango and Coahuila, the process is similar to mezcal, with roasting the hearts of Desert Spoon in volcanic rock-lined pits. Flavours vary according to the terrior, but expect notes like eucalyptus , pepper, cocoa, with lighter smoke accents.

Vodka & Gin

Vodka's history is shrouded in debate and myth. It was originally named by the Polish, but Russia is most commonly associated with vodka. In the 15th century, vodka was distilled for medical benefits and known as “Zhizennia Voda” or Water of Life. Vodka is a shortened version meaning “little water” that arose in the 19th century when it was drunk as alcohol. Vodka is a grain distillate that is heavily influenced by the type of distillation and filtration it undergoes and the number of times it is filtered. Each distillery has its own process that creates a unique taste. Vodka can be made from anything starch-based such as potatoes, although 90% of vodkas are grain-based. Vodka, unlike whisky, is not aged.

Gin was produced by the Dutch in the 16th century as “genever”. It was dubbed “Dutch Courage” by the English soldiers. By the 17th century, it was known as gin and had reached England. It had a massive popularity boom, in what was known as the Gin Craze. In the United States, prohibition led to “bathtub gin” as gin did not require aging and could be produced in home stills. Gin is created though a neutral spirit being infused with botanicals to create a unique flavour.

As Vodka and Gin have aged over the centuries the flavours, too, have evolved with the spirits.

Fortified Wines & Vermouth

Sherry & Vermouth are both styles of fortified wines, meaning that distilled spirits are added to a wine base. The largest distinction between the two, vermouth is flavoured or 'aromatised' with aromatic herbs and spices, adding a medicinal quality. Vermouth can be found in both sweetened and unsweetened styles. Whereas Sherry, from the Jerez region of Spain, is made only from grapes. However, there is a wide array of sherry styles from dry to sweet and light to intense. Most sherry exhibits nutty, dried fruit or saline flavours.
